FANCY DRESS WEEKEND “Mardi Gras” February 22-23

CONTACT 74

William Friedkin

Utilizing film clips from the "French Connection" and "The Exorcist," director William Friedkin wound up the Contact 74 symposium March 7 by explaining the art of his profession as trying to be "as entertaining as possible."

And Friedkin lived up to that statement before 650 persons in Lexington's State Theatre. A showman, he hurled paper wads at the crowd which earlier had been pelting him and the Contact Committee as he waited to be introduced.

He said a director's task was primarily one of "communicating with actors and technicians so I can communicate with you."

He said the effects of "The Exorcist" were being blown out of proportion. He said the screaming, fainting and vomiting reported by several media occurred among about "one-tenth of one percent" of those who had seen the movie. He jocularly added that all that purported reaction to the film would be "very bad for popcorn sales" if it were true.

Heywood Hale Broun

Pleading for inaccuracy before a capacity crowd in Lee Chapel February 25, television sports essayist Heywood Hale Broun described the art of his profession as the summation of "poetry and facts you can gather at the moment."

Spouting multi-syllabic words from his seven-dictionary collection, Broun related his experience in covering not the games themselves but the characters who make up those games.

Broun noted his quest to seek out the essence of an event, observing, for example, that the most exciting aspect of Super Bowl 1 was its halftime show, that football is more interesting when badly played, and that Oakland is about as exciting as Tierra del Fuego.

Much as the characters of sports make up the real stories, Broun himself, and not what he said was the event of interest. Referring to the patchwork sportcoat he wore, he said his wardrobe's purpose was to attract attention to himself. If that fails, he concluded, the next step will be "fluorescence or nudity."

CONTACT 74

Art Buchwald

Columnist Art Buchwald delivered his one-liners and his Watergate slide show March 4 before the largest of the Contact 74 audiences — some 1,100 persons in Doremus Gymnasium.

Describing the art of his profession, Buchwald said facts get in his way and he's against whoever's in power. He likened his job of writing the "Capitol Punishment" column to "being cruise director for the Titanic."

Keying on the continuing Watergate saga, Buchwald related to his audience such insights as, "To be a secretary at the White House nowadays, you have to be able to erase 120 words a minute," and "press secretary Ron Ziegler has done for credibility in government what the Boston Strangler did for door to door salesmen." Buchwald also said he doesn't really hate Nixon — he admitted he worships "the very quicksand Nixon walks on."

And commenting on the gasoline shortage, Buchwald said the country should institute rationing and then turn it over to the Mafia. "They could run it cheaper," he said, "and they sure as hell could enforce it better."

OREGON: Ralph Towner, Colin Walcott, Paul McCandless, Glen Moore

Oregon

The musical ensemble OREGON played to an audience which turned out to be the smallest of the four CONTACT presentations, but the rapport between artists and audience was the strongest of the entire symposium.

Fitting right in to CONTACT 74's theme of Contemporary Communications, the group played its uniquely global blend of music to a Lee Chapel audience of about 300. It kept happening for almost 3 hours, the longest concert at W & L in recent memory. Many who experienced the music in its entirety also said it was the best.

The Wednesday concert was followed by a Thursday workshop in the University Center. The musicians of OREGON, played tunes, talked, answered questions, and held individual sessions for present and future musicians. Among the listeners was Bill Freidkin.

THE GENERALS

Football

The beginning of the "long road" for the 1973 Washington and Lee football team came on a cold October night in Lynchburg City Stadium. It was there the Generals, unbeaten after Wilson Field wins over Hamilton and Centre, ran into an angry bunch from Hampden-Sydney; final score, 40-6, Tigers. After that came six more losses, some one-sided, some heartbreaking, thus making the season mark an unexpected 2-7.

Bright spots in such a season would seem hard to find, but such is not the case here. The W&L passing attack was the state's best, led by quarterbacks Lewis Powell and Jack Berry and receivers Tony Perry and Mark George. Senior co-captain Bill Wallace entered all-VCAA honors at defensive back as well as an NCAA post-graduate scholarship.

The brightest spot of all, however, came from the coaching staff, led by first-year head coach Bill McHenry. Throughout the season the staff remained optimistic and enthusiastic. With many starters returning, 1974 could be a year to remember.

Soccer

Though some of the scores might seem less than convincing, Washington and Lee's soccer team got the job done more often than not, resulting in the best soccer season since 1966.

W&L finished the year with a 7-4 mark, the losses coming to Lynchburg, Johns Hopkins, Navy and state champion Madison. Among the season's highlights were a 2-1 win over Virginia Tech, a 7-1 Homecoming thrashing of VMI and shutout wins over Randolph-Macon, Hamden-Sydney, and Roanoke.

Co-captain Rolf Piranian and Junior Jim Foxx hauled in several post-season honors. Piranian was named to the All-South team, while both earned second-team All-State honors. Five W&L booters, Piranian, Foxx, Paul Devine, John Embree and Barclay Armstrong, were named to the Western Division All-Star team.

There was this stream, nively carved; it looked like a dream of some mythological paradise; but those cows in the pasture
would trod the land down,
and that shepherd, that clown,
seemed to cry out of gladness,
was happy to see the animals
in line; so the poor old garden
and the water which nourished it,
went untended, unnoticed,
it was . . . such a crime.

There was a swan in that stream, painted in grays, blacks, and whites; that sight seemed to bring to mind earlier Thanksgivings,
where I'd see in old pictures,
sleigh rides in a snowy woods.
The land, swan and stream,
the foolish young herdsman;
although they all went with me to the great halls of knowledge, still did not know whether the knowledge was organic.

To you now, fair lady; you who since you were seventeen have been obsessed with the artistic makings of your breasts;
will you evoke memories
of the stream and the swan
or will you merely mimic
the dance of the cows.

BLACK CULTURE WEEK

Opening with a worship service in Lee Chapel on February 3, Black Culture Week covered a range of activities including a film, ball and concert.

Lutrelle D. Rainey, delivered the main sermon in the service on the subject of "The courage to Dream." Dr. Rainey is advisor to the Student Association for Black Unity, which sponsored the week's events.

Wendell P. Russell spoke on Monday, February 4 on the black experience in education. Russell is president of Virginia State College in Petersburg and a member of various state and educational advisory councils.

On Tuesday evening, February 5, the Virginia Union University Choir presented a concert under the direction of Odell Hobbs. The choir presented music ranging from baroque to modern jazz and gospel.

The director for personnel in Richmond, Virginia, Theodore Thorton visited the W and L campus on Wednesday. His address related to his hiring experience involving blacks. His speech was designated the Leslie G. Smith Memorial lecture, honoring the first black graduate of Washington and Lee who was killed in 1970.

A documentary film covering the life of Martin Luther King, Jr. was shown February 7. Black Culture Week was concluded on Friday night with "The Black Ball." A group from Roanoke, The Love Men, provided the entertainment for the formal dance.

BASKETBALL

It was a season only a few people figured on.

It started with a romp over Clinch Valley, and a fine showing against Virginia.

Then nothing went right. Six losses in their next seven starts. The margin of defeat in five of the setbacks was the three points or less.

Two and seven. Most everyone gave up.

Everyone except the players and coaches. They played inspired basketball the rest of the way. They started winning the close ones. They decided they could do it.

When it was all over, the Generals had pulled out another winning season, the eighth straight for Verne Canfield. Their 13-11 record included wins in 11 of their last 15 games.

Skip Lichtfuss had his best year. The senior captain averaged 22 points and 10 rebounds per game, became W and L fifth highest career scorer, and earned all — VCAA honors for the second straight year.

How did the team pull off a winning season? Verne Canfield had the answer. "They never gave up."

SWIMMING

Washington and Lee's swimmers recorded another winning season, yet very few came away pleased after the season-ending state meet at Old Dominion.

The Generals did not have as much success in Norfolk as they expected. They could do no better than sixth in the final team standings.

The state meet showing overshadowed what had been a fine season for Bill Stearn's tankers. The highlight of the season was W and L's dual meet win over William and Mary, the first time in ten years the Generals had put down the Indians. Ward L finished with a 6-3 dual meet record.

Freshmen grabbed the spotlight individually. Tad Van Leer qualified for the national championships in the sprints, while distanceman Porter McNeil set school records in the 500, 1000 and 1650 freestyles.

WRESTLING

For Washington and Lee wrestling, "things got tough all over" in 1973-74, especially the schedule.

Many rugged opponents, including ACC champ Virginia, Virginia Commonwealth, Pembroke State, and Frostburg State, popped up on the schedule making Gary Franke's first season at W and L a tough one.

The team fell to a 7-11-1 record after two winning seasons. Again, however, the tougher schedule had a lot to do with the final record. W and L finished second to George Mason in the UCAA tournament.

Junior Doug Ford again had an outstanding season. Wrestling at 167 and 177 pounds, Ford compiled a 14-4-1 record, and went to the NCAA championships.

Also enjoying good years were Rick Heldrich at 177, and Jim Stieff at 150, and Lee Keck, at 118-126.
